AMERICAN CATHOLIC HISTORICAL SOCIETY
715 SPRUCE STREET, PHILADELPHIA

PREFACE

THE story is told of Cardinal Newman that, when thankfully acknowledging receipt of a new novel, he added his regret at the book's having no index. Though the anecdote may be apocryphal, yet it illustrates the importance he attached to indexes as aids to research and investigation. When properly compiled they tell us where not to look, as well as where to go, for the information we are seeking, and are therefore great time-savers.

But this end is not served by a mere alphabetical list of the proper names occurring in a volume or a series of volumes, with indication of every page on which they are mentioned. The time, place, and occasion of their appearing should also be indicated; and this indication should be as brief as the necessary clearness will permit. Research is also very often aided by cross-references, so that, if one caption escapes us, we can have recourse to another for guidance.

The compiler of this Index has constantly kept these points in view, and has, accordingly, striven to make his work a digest of the contents of the thirty-one volumes published by the Society during the first thirty-six years of its existence. That the work is not perfect he is fully conscious; no doubt critics may find lapses and omissions; but he hopes they are comparatively few and relatively unimportant.

The work has been a labor of love to one of the very few surviving Charter members of the Society—of those who signed the call for its organization only two are left; but the fruit of their labors remains and flourishes under their successors.
Esto perpetua.
